

Understand the Real Truth about Whether Forex Brokers Trade with you or Not

There are many people who believe that forex brokers tend to compete in the forex market against their clients. Many people wonder about this aspect especially if they have large leverage ratio options with their brokers. What you need to know is that the forex markets are not as simple as you may think.

Many clients have found out that their forex brokers tend to take positions that are opposite of what they have taken up. While the forex broker makes money, the client starts to see the capital dwindling.

There are a large number of 'so called' reputed forex brokers also who tend to bet against their clients to make money. The interesting part is that irrespective of how good a trader you are, your client is likely to take a position that is against you. When the leverage is large, this is definitely the case.

The best way to ascertain if the forex broker is trying to rid you of all your money is to use his demo account and compare it with the others. Look at the rates that are shown in the demo account. If you notice any kind of a discrepancy in the rates shown, you will know that the broker is not genuine and that he is probably taking a stance against you.

There are retail brokers and ECN Forex Brokers too. It is fairly obvious that the broker will aim at having the client lose so that they can win. They can also change price quotes and ranges so that they win against the client and make money.

Make sure that you choose an ECN forex broker in order to ensure that everything is being handled well. A good thing is that you can be assured of the rates. While the leverage that is allowed is not too high, there is the aspect of minimum deposits that are fairly high. It is suggested that you start forex trading with a small amount so that you can judge for yourself whether the broker is genuine or not.

There are other things involved in forex trading other than choosing the broker. You will also need to decide on a trading platform. Listen to the comments of only those people who you have faith in.
